

Tulane to launch science communication program to help tackle global issues

Barri Bronston

bbronst@tulane.edu

July 02, 2024 9:30 AM

Tulane professors Janan Jayawickramarajah, left, and Heather Machado will oversee the new Science Policy and Communication Graduate Fellows Program.

It's one thing to understand science and another to communicate it — especially to policymakers, funders, and even skeptics.

That's one of the goals of the new Science Policy and Communication Graduate Fellows Program at Tulane University, which will launch in the fall of 2024. An initiative of the Murphy Institute's Center for Public Policy Research, the graduate-level program is specifically for PhD students entering their second or third year of study. Read the full story here.