Foods for the PKU Diet

Are you looking for a dairy substitute?

Fairly new on the market is So Delicious' line of Coconut milk products which are low in protein and available in regular grocery stores. Be sure you don't buy the So Delicious almond plus/almond milk or soy milk ice cream products by mistake as these are higher in protein. Only the coconut milk ones are low. Check the label to make sure they contain 1 g protein or less to know you are buying the right one.

They have beverages, creamers, yogurt cups, yogurt drinks, ice creams and ice cream bars available. So Delicious Coconut milk drinks now come in single serving tetra's as well. Most of the ice-creams have $\mathbf{1 g}$ protein per serving (with the exception of the ones with almond \& peanut butter in the names - those are higher - be sure to check the label). Most of the yogurts have less than 1 g protein with the exception of the greek yogurts which are higher.

While the So Delicious Almond milks are too high in protein, Silk Pure Almond Milk can fit into the PKU diet. These are also available in Single serving tetras.

Craving Cheese?

Why not try some Daiya Cheese (dairy free and vegan) wedges or shreds. These are available in many local stores and used in several vegetarian restaurants in town.

Not using low protein noodles? Want something you can find at a local store?

Why not give miracle noodles a try. These are made from water soluble fibre and are very low calorie/calorie free and very low in protein. Check out their website for more details and where to buy: www.miraclenoodle.com/storelocator

You could also try cellophane noodles or rice noodles. These are usually found in the ethnic section of the grocery store.

Try making a vegetarian taco in a corn tortilla or taco shell. Many store bought tortilla's/tacos can fit into your phe budget and can be tasty if filled with lettuce, cut up olives and sautéed mushrooms and a small bit of Daiya cheese.

Wondering if you can eat Gluten Free foods?
You have probably noticed more and more gluten free foods on the market. Some of these are lower in protein than their non-gluten free counter parts, but not all. Generally if a gluten free food has $\mathbf{1 g}$ protein per serving or less in it, you should be able to fit it into the PKU diet.
