Tulane working on test to predict COVID-19 complications

Could some of those who died from COVID-19 and other infectious diseases have been saved by a diagnosis that predicts how severe their cases will be and provides timelier treatment?

An interdisciplinary team of Tulane engineers and doctors including Dahlene Fusco, MD, and Arnaud Drouin, MD, hopes to answer that question with the development of new technology designed to detect severe COVID complications such as thrombosis, a condition in which blood clots block veins and arteries. Read more about the research here.
