Courseault opens one of world's first Ehlers-Danlos syndrome clinics at Tulane

The patients came to him with a wide range of symptoms, everything from low blood pressure to dental issues paired with non-operative musculoskeletal injuries. To ensure they had access to care, Dr. Jacques Courseault started one of the first Ehlers-Danlos clinics in the world. Now patients from across the U.S. are coming to Tulane for care.

"Never did I think I'd be treating an autosomal dominant genetic disorder," said Courseault. "But once you see them, you recognize that you can't ignore that these patients and athletes have a different body type and need to be treated differently." Read more here.
